ANNUAL TRUSTEES CONFERENCE

POWER OF DISAGGREGATED DATA

- Data disaggregation is the process of filtering a population into smaller populations based on certain characteristics.
- Disaggregating data can indicate whether or not the results of data for a subpopulation is masking the results of data for another.
- Disaggregating data avoids the obscuring nature of “overall averages” by emphasizing the “experiences and outcomes of different student groups.”
- An example in the California community college system is the disaggregation of the unprepared versus prepared students in viewing completion rates in the Scorecard.

DISAGGREGATED RACE/ETHNICITY DATA

- The American Community Survey of 2006 found that 14% of Asians do not have an education level higher than high school.
- However, when disaggregating the data, it was found that 35% of Cambodians, 38% of Laotians, and 39% of Hmongs achieved an education level below high school.
- In other words, a good example of valuable data that was left out when considering only Asians as a whole.
- Importance of disaggregation is apparent when capturing the Scorecard completion rates over time by race/ethnicity.

BENEFITS OF DISAGGREGATED DATA

- Disaggregated data describing the racial/ethnic makeup of communities and can help school officials understand the cultural differences of each student and make better-informed decisions on how to best serve their students.
- Analyzing trends in disaggregated data, schools can effectively decide on measures and practices that best address the challenges of maintaining or improving the effectiveness of their academic support programs and services.

QUOTE FROM SBE/MBH POTENTIAL VENDOR (4/12/2019)

Dear Sam,

Thank you very much for taking time yesterday to provide information and guidance about procurement opportunities with San Jose/Evergreen Community College District.

The extent to which you engaged my small business colleagues and me to tour two sites is indescribable. The campus representatives at various levels that you introduced us to were warm and inviting, and absolutely the right people we sometimes have difficulty meeting.

They not only helped us feel important, but also created extra motivation to be properly prepared to provide quality service in the near future.

I hope all of the SF Bay Area is fully aware of the tremendous value and opportunity you and your leadership at SJECCD genuinely provide by engaging with local small business owners that are serving the surrounding community.

Thank you.

Sincerely,
Carlos Reza
